| SGS | 360 | Cultural Aspects of Globalization | Cultural aspects of globalization, starting with a theoretical discussion of what culture is and then weaving this discussion into an empirical examination of UNESCO's World Heritage program as a practical means of studying the role of culture in globalization. A number of questions guide our inquiry: What is culture? What forms does it take? Can culture be preserved? If so, what are the consequences? How is the UNESCO World Heritage Program structured? How does it conceive culture? What is its understanding of the global and the role of the local in it? | N | LEC | N | GNA | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours |

| SGS | 370 | Geopolitics | Geopolitics is a field that deals with war, conflict and the politics of animosity and violence. It calls special attention to the distribution of power on a global scale, and to the spatial scales at which power, authority and control operate. At one time, this involved studying how various "great powers" and "wise men" carved up the world according to their goals and interests. But power is everywhere! To name only a few examples, it is present in the ways that NGOs operate in conflict zones, in global health advocacy and awareness, in media coverage of distant catastrophes and seemingly immanent risks, and in disaster management and emergency response plans. Scholars in this field study topics such as war, diplomacy, conflict, migration, religious strife, terrorism and similar fields. | N | LEC | N | GNA | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Politics and Global Studies | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours or minimum junior standing; Credit is allowed for only SGS 370 or SGS 394 (Global Geopolitics) OR Visiting University Student |

| SLC | 358 | Saving the Roman Empire | In his autobiographical epitaph, the Res Gestae, Augustus, founder of the Roman Empire, claimed to have restored Rome to her former glory. His moral, social and political reforms solidified Roman control of the world and the imperial family's hold on ruling her. Through the next five hundred years, as the power of the empire waned and waxed, Augustus's successors turned time and again to reforming the empire and restoring her to her former glory - to saving the Roman Empire. In doing so they had to deal with problems both external and internal; sometimes their ideas worked, often they did not. Ultimately they failed, and Rome and the western empire fell in CE 476. Examines the rise, decline and fall of the Roman Empire from the perspective of internal and external problems the Empire faced, and asks which reforms worked, which did not work, and why. What could have been done differently? Should anything have been done differently, or was the western Roman Empire always doomed? | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3 | (L or HU) & H | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102, 105, or 108 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only GRK 294/HST 294/LAT 294/SLC 294 (Saving the Roman Empire) or LAT 358 or LAT 394/SLC 394 (Saving the Roman Empire) or SLC 358 OR Visiting University Student |

| SLC | 423 | Italian Organized Crime in Films and History | Through an analysis of historical, anthropological, literary, political and cinematic texts, explores representations of the Italian organized crime in Italian and American films from the early 20th century to today. Discovers different "Mafias" originating in Italy, but whose reach extends much further, such as the Cosa Nostra in Sicily, the Camorra in Naples, and the 'Ndrangheta in Calabria. Examines the fiction, stereotypes, myths and legends surrounding the mafia through a scrupulous analysis of some of the most important American and Italian films portraying mafia culture. Italians have used the medium of film to address the issue of the mafia, raising awareness about the harsh reality of life in the mafia and the ways in which it reaches into every aspect of Italian politics and society. Explores how Italian mafia films subvert international fascination with the mafioso by disrupting the glamorized myths that are mainly perpetuated by American popular cinema. | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3 | (L or HU) & G | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102, 105, or 108 with C or better or min 45 hours; Credit for only FMS 423 or ITA 423 or SLC 423 or ITA 494/SLC 494 (Italian Organized Crime in Films & History) or FMS 494/ITA 494/SLC 494 (Mafia & Film) OR Visiting University Student |

| SLC | 439 | Art in Exile: Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov | In English. The scandalous success of Lolita (1955) allowed Vladimir Nabokov to retire from teaching at Cornell University and move to Switzerland to devote himself to fiction, translation, criticism and lepidoptery. Examines the Russian roots of Nabokov's Russian (in translation) and American novels about exile: his first novel, Mary (1926), The Defense (1929), Glory (1932), and his tribute to 19th-century Russian literature, The Gift (1938), which he considered his greatest Russian novel. These are followed by Lolita (1955), Pnin (1957) and Pale Fire (1962), his memoirs, Speak, Memory (1966), and some essays and short stories. Films include Lolita by Stanley Kubrick (1962) and Adrian Lyne (1997). | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3 | L or HU | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102 or 105 or 108 with C or better; Credit is allowed for only RUS 439 or SLC 439 or ENG/RUS/SLC 494 (Art in Exile: Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov) |

| SLC | 442 | Dracula and Vampire Lore | Vampire stories are not only local phenomena placed in Transylvania, as the common stereotype is incessantly spread. Legends about Dracula and the Count himself may be "untrue," but events that took place during the life and reign of the Wallachian Voevode Vlad Tepes, better known as Vlad the Impaler, are nonfictional. He ruled during the time of the Ottoman Empire extension to Europe and his fight against the Turks give us thought on the altered understanding of Vlad as a vampire figure. Occurring and recurring in continuously changed environments, Count Dracula affects everyone to the same degree, but still remains as secret and elusive as before, pitted against a vision of mysterious spaces that evoke the faraway castles from Whitby, UK (the origin of Stoker's Dracula), from Bran and Poenari Castles in Transylvania as well as the visions of Jules Verne's Castle of the Carpathians. | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of International Letters and Cultures | 3 | (L or HU) & G & H | Prereq(s): ENG 101, 105 or 107 w/C or better; Credit for only ROM 442 or SLC 442 or SLC 494 (Drac&Vamp Belief in the Wrld) or SLC 494 (Drac&Vamp Castles) or SLC 494 (Drac&Vamp Lore) or SLC 494 (Drac:Between Myth&Hist) OR Visiting University Student |

| SOS | 456 | Human Rights and Sustainability | Addresses the connections between human rights and environmental sustainability. Legal and scholarly approaches linking these areas present new perspectives for addressing some of the greatest challenges of our time, given the important resource dimensions of economic and social rights and the human dimensions of sustainability. Yet human rights demands and environmental concerns are not always in harmony. Explores these tensions and opportunities by examining three substantive areas: urban ecology and human rights, the human right to food, and the human rights implications of extractive industries such as oil and mining. Following an introduction to the key concepts of human rights and sustainability, explores the substantive areas through theoretical and empirical readings on each; grassroots accounts of struggles over environment-related human rights; and selections from literature and film that illustrate the environmental justice issues at stake. | N | LEC | N | GNA | College of Global Futures | School of Sustainability | 3 | (L or SB) & G | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102, 105, or 108 with C or better; minimum 36 hours; Credit is allowed for only JUS 456 or JUS 497 (Seminar in Human Rights) or SOC 455 or SOS 456 |

As hazards roll into disasters they lay bare the underlying conditions of socio-ecological vulnerability and inequities that affect almost all aspects of daily life. They also affect the infrastructures and institutions supporting daily life. This realization stimulates improvisation and ideas for just, green, inclusive and resilient futures. Investigates case studies to reconstruct how people, affected by and surviving a disaster, advanced sustainability transitions and reduced disaster risk. Uses an interdisciplinary perspective to analyze these transitions, drawing on theories of change from sustainability transitions and transformation as well as disaster management research. Moreover, students ground the literature in concrete experiences as shared through guest speakers, professional experiences, documentaries and an applied project. | N | LEC | N | GNA | College of Global Futures | School of Sustainability | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only PAF 568 (CPP 537) or SOS 494 (Disasters as Opportunities for Change Towards Sust) or SOS 537 or SOS 598 (Disasters as Opportunities for Change Towards Sust) |
| SOS | 539 | Human Well-Being and Sustainability | Many of us take it for granted that human well-being is the ultimate end of sustainability or sustainable development. But what is a well-being, really? Social scientists collect empirical data and develop indices, indicators and other proxies to represent and measure well-being; but is it the kind of phenomenon that can be explained? In other words, is there a correct theory of human well-being? How does one measure well-being? Moreover, what are we to make of the relationship between well-being and sustainability? Where do these two concepts coincide? Where do they come apart? Does human well-being presuppose a commitment to sustainability? If the ultimate end of sustainability is human well-being, then is sustainability a redundant concept? This interdisciplinary course tackles such questions by critically examining the most prominent philosophical theories of well-being and by considering how they might be reconciled with relevant empirical evidence. Also spends considerable time reflecting on the problems that arise with respect to measuring well-being, particularly in the context of public policy. | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Global Futures | School of Sustainability | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student; Credit is allowed for only HPS/PHI/SOS 591 (Human Well-Being and Sustainability) or PHI 538 or SOS 494 (Human Well-Being and Sustainability) or SOS 539 |

Targeting is the process by which we analyze opportunities and identify those customers where our business has the greatest prospects for success. Positioning is the process of assembling the "total offering" (product, service, distribution and price) and communicating the benefits of this "total offering" to the members of our target market. As such, rote learning of terms and concepts is not sufficient to prepare students to manage a business in global markets. | N | LEC | N | GNA | Thunderbird School of Global Management | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): Thunderbird School of Global Management undergraduate major, Global Management certificate, or International Trade certificate student OR Visiting University Student |

| TGM | 556 | Global Strategic Services Marketing | Services have come to dominate our economy. Yet there remains a naïve belief that services marketing and management is a simple adaptation of goods marketing and management. Unlike physical goods, services are co-produced with customers at a time, and in a place, of the customer's choosing. This co-production directly involves an organization's front-line employees. As a result, it is more difficult for services to be inventoried and checked for quality assurance. Provides a thorough understanding of the management and continuous improvement of service operations, including a thorough understanding of the role of customers in service operations such that service firms can design effective service experience so as to minimize service failure. Provides students with an end-to-end hands-on customer experience management (e.g., customer satisfaction and loyalty), project that involves survey design, customer experience model development, data collection, data analysis, and recommendations. | N | LEC | N | GNA | Thunderbird School of Global Management | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): TGM 557 |

| TGM | 730 | Systems Change and Transformation in the Anthropocene | Transnational hyper-connectivity is an essential feature of our time. Yet in government, business and civil society, our approaches to power, leadership and organization remain locked in the competition-based frameworks of the 20th century. To understand these all too common problems, we need to move beyond linear models--based on a fairly detailed knowledge of the present situation and supposed to be able to make reasonable forecasts of the future--which underlie much formal policy analysis and design. Understanding the implications of strategic behavior, nonlinear feedbacks and heterogeneous actors on policies is needed. Equally we need to understand the impact of policies at multiple scales and across a wide range of stakeholders. Assesses these topics through systems change and how this has led to transformation in the Anthropocene. The foundational premise of this course is that the traditional discipline for achieving objectives in global affairs--statecraft--is necessary but not sufficient for the networked age. New tools and strategies are needed to understand and influence a world based on connectivity. Network theory provides a starting point. Covers basic principles of network theory and helps understand their relevance to the design, development and management of fit-for-purpose networks involving business, civic organizations and nonprofits, and government. Examines case studies of different global problems--from health to human rights, war to economic renewal, the environment to terrorism. Much progress has been made in the scientific understanding of the kinds of systems--under the name of complexity. Explores the consequence of these new insights for policy. Discusses salient policy and management implications of a complex adaptive system frame. | N | LEC | N | GNA | Thunderbird School of Global Management | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |

| TGM | 740 | Leading and Managing Global Organizations: Advanced Topics | Organizations, private (business) and public (government, nonprofit and hybrid), all face chronic management and leadership problems that pose significant challenges to them. Organizations are complex and problematic entities, which is especially true for government organizations. These problems include the difficulty of designing organizations capable of coping with highly dynamic and rapidly changing environments, the challenge of developing strategies and structures for hypercompetitive conditions, and the greater complexity of managing global enterprises. Further issues addressed are the difficult task of shaping a corporate culture, managing politics and conflict between individuals and organizational units, and motivating employees who are more mobile than ever. Students learn to design incentive systems, as well as lead teams effectively. Covers how leaders of these organizations deal with these challenges. Helps students gain a deeper understanding of the nature of organizational change and the complexities that underlie them (through conceptual frameworks, organizational structure and design, the interaction of organizations with their environments and the behavior of individuals and groups within organizations; readings; and; discussions). Illuminates skills needed for managing change. Enhances sensitivity to the contribution and consequences of the human element as related to change. Helps students think about how to "thrive on and in change." | N | LEC | N | GNA | Thunderbird School of Global Management | Thunderbird School of Global Management | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): degree- or nondegree-seeking graduate student |

| WST | 469 | Abject Bodies and the Politics of Trash | Examines the possibilities inherent in "theorizing from the gutter"; looking at the world not from a lofty "Ivory Tower" but from the slime, the muck, the dumpster, the trash heap, the wasteland, the discarded and the downtrodden. Takes its theoretical framework from a radical 1960s manifesto called SCUM Manifesto by Valerie Solanas and from the French feminist philosophies of Julia Kristeva, who theorized the abject as a relationship with the grotesque that reveals the deep-seated fear of death. Uses these theoretical positions to examine trash, both abstractly and literally. Works through a variety of concepts ranging from actual trash, garbage, waste, toxic sludge, pollution and dirt, and tackles more abstract notions of trash such as the knowledge produced on the fringe in circuses, amusement parks, "trailer trash" zones, freak shows and the bodies of those marked as "Other" or different. | N | LEC | N | OPT | New College of Interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences | School of Humanities, Arts, and Cultural Studies | 3 | SB & C | Prerequisite(s): ENG 102, 105, or 108 with C or better; minimum 36 hours; Credit is allowed for only AMS 469 or ETH 469 or JHR/MAS 598 (Abject Bodies and the Politics of Trash) or WST 469 OR Visiting University Student |

| WWS | 460 | World War II | Explores the causes, conduct and consequences of World War II. When did World War II start? How was it fought, and what did that mean for soldiers, the homefront and millions of civilians in Japanese or German occupied regions? What did the world that emerged in its wake look like? The course explores these fundamental questions with an emphasis on multiple explanations of the causes of the war in Asia and Europe and the contingency of Allied victory. Explores the war as both a total and a global war in which perceptions of race, class and gender shaped the experience of combatants and noncombatants, many of whom died in indiscriminate bombing campaigns. Racial ideologies also led to the brutalization of soldiers, which in turn fueled the violence against civilians, as exemplified by the Holocaust and Japanese war crimes. Finally, the course turns to the global order emerging after the war and the different narratives that emerged from it. | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Historical, Philosophical and Religious Studies | 3 | HU & H & G | Prerequisite(s): minimum 45 hours; Credit is allowed for only HST 460 or HST 494 (Introduction to World War II Studies) or HST 494 (World War II Studies) or JST 460 or WWS 460 OR Visiting University Student |

| WWS | 563 | The Lived Experience of World War II | Using the vast oral history collection of the National World War II Museum in New Orleans, Louisiana, this course examines how individuals experienced the war. A number of factors shaped how people experienced the war--whether one was a soldier, non-combatant, resistor or collaborator. Focuses on how ordinary people made sense of their experiences during the war. In addition, students explore the theory and practice of collecting and using oral histories. | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Historical, Philosophical and Religious Studies | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): WWS 561; WWS 562 |

| WWS | 566 | World War II Today | Analyzes the impact and legacy of World War II, with an emphasis on the roots of contemporary problems and issues. A global conflict that impacted millions of people, World War II fundamentally reshaped the political and cultural landscape of our planet. Explores the new global order that emerged after the end of World War II in 1945. While the war had immediate impacts in the postwar era, the legacy of the war continues to inform current conflicts across the globe and resonates in the current social and political order. This is especially apparent in how contemporary narratives situate, remember and memorialize the war. Uses themes to help us think historically and uncover the historical roots of the present order. | N | LEC | N | OPT | College of Liberal Arts and Sciences | School of Historical, Philosophical and Religious Studies | 3 | | Prerequisite(s): WWS 561; WWS 562 |

| WWS | 597 | Capstone | Students draw on the experiences, skills and competencies they developed throughout the WWII Studies MA program to generate a digital portfolio that showcases the breadth and depth of their MA experience. Students refine and extend work they produced in previous WWS courses and also develop reflective essays that critically assess their performance in the program, as well as essays that articulate the transferable value of the degree to potential employers or admissions committee members.
